About

NEFIS is designed for judges who need to keep up to date with EU developments on EU citizenship and free movement.
NEFIS contains EU legislation and ALL relevant case law on EU citizens and their family members in relation to:
* exit and entry * residence * equal treatment * loss of rights * family members * procedural rights and * Brexit.
NEFIS does not include case law on regular migration or asylum.
We would like to refer to separate Newsletters on these issues: NEMIS and NEAIS.

Editorial

Welcome to the first issue of NEFIS in 2024.
In this issue we would like to draw your attention to the following.

New Judgments
Equal treatment
In R.L. v Landeshauptstad Wiesbaden (C-61/22) the question is whether the obligation to take fingerprints and store them in identity cards in accordance with Art. 3(5) of Reg. 2019/1157, on strengthening the security of identity cards of Union citizens and of residence documents issued to Union citizens and their family members exercising their right of free movement, infringe higher-ranking EU law? According to the GC of the CJEU the limitation on the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Articles 7 and 8 of the Charter resulting from the inclusion of two fingerprints in the storage medium of identity cards does not appear to be of a seriousness which is disproportionate when compared with the significance of the various objectives pursued by that measure. Accordingly, such a measure must be regarded as being based on a fair balance between those objectives and the fundamental rights involved. But Regulation 2019/1157 itself is invalid in so far as it was adopted on the basis of Article 21(2) TFEU. However, the effects of Regulation 2019/1157 are to be maintained until the entry into force of a new regulation based on Article 77(3) TFEU and intended to replace it.

Loss of Rights
The joined cases S.Ö. et al. (C-684/22 to C-686/22), concern the compatibility of German nationality law with EU citizenship (Article 20 TFEU), which allows for the automatic loss of German nationality upon the voluntary acquisition of another nationality. The applicants are former naturalised German citizens of Turkish origin who, following naturalization in Germany, have reacquired Turkish nationality without requesting the permission of the competent national authorities to retain their German nationality. This condition was introduced in law as of 1 January 2000, while cases up to 31 December 1999 were covered by different rules. All applicants lost ex lege their German nationality when the authorities became aware of their reacquisition of Turkish nationality. The CJEU was asked to rule on the compatibility with Article 20 TFEU of:
(a) the German advance permission procedure for retaining nationality upon voluntary acquisition of another nationality, and
(b) the fact that in this permission procedure the consequences of the loss of German and EU citizenship are not examined from the perspective of EU law. Rather, what is examined is the existence of a special reason for acquisition of another nationality while retaining the German one.
The CJEU ruled that protecting the special bond of nationality by prohibiting dual nationality is a legitimate interest for EU states which they can pursue if their laws do not violate the principle of proportionality. Automatic loss of nationality and the requirement of an advance permission were not considered inconsistent with the principle of proportionality as long as they allow for an individual examination of the consequences of loss of EU citizenship. The effectiveness of the rights of EU citizenship require that the person is duly informed about the possibility to request an examination and the time limit for it, which is for the national court to examine. Relevant factors include the fact that naturalization required the applicants to give up their Turkish nationality and the context in which they reapplied for Turkish nationality, namely the reform of German nationality law which may have had a negative impact on the possibility to effectively initiate the advance permission procedure. If the applicants were not duly informed, there should be a possibility to carry out the individual examination as an ancillary issue in the context of an application for a travel document or any other document showing nationality, including the possibility to order the ex tunc recovery of nationality.

In Pedro Francisco (C-62/23) the CJEU ruled that in its assessment whether a right of residence enjoyed by a third-country national family member of an EU citizen can be restricted, a Member State can take into account the fact that that family member was previously subject of an arrest, provided that there is an overall assessment of that conduct, in which the facts on which the arrest was based and the possible legal consequences thereof are considered expressly and in detail. To merit the conclusion that a previous arrest represents 'a genuine, present and sufficiently serious there to one of the fundamental interests of society' MS have to establish that there are 'consistent, objective and precise factors which allow for the reliability of the suspicions weighing on that person as a result of that arrest' (cons. 36). In the admissibility assessment, the CJEU confirms that where MS decide to extend the scope of EU law, in Spain Dir. 2004/38 also applies to Spanish nationals who have not – previously - exercised free movement rights, it is competent to answer preliminary references made by national courts to ensure uniform application of those rules.

In E.P / Prefet du Gers (C-716/22) the CJEU confirms that following the entry into force of the Withdrawal Agreement between the UK and the EU, British nationals who have exercised their right to free movement no longer benefit from a right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament in their Member State of residence. Member States are not required to grant that right to persons who are no longer Union citizens. The fact that such former EU citizens have not been able to vote in the Brexit referendum was judged irrelevant since it was based on electoral law choices made by the UK, thus not linked to EU law. Furthermore, the validity of the Withdrawal Agreement is not called into question by the fact that it fails to recognise a right to vote in EP elections or a right to stand as candidate to former EU citizens.

Procedural rights

In N.W. & P.Q. (C-420/22 & C-528/22) the CJEU established that though MS are not obliged to examine systematically and on their own initiative whether there is a relationship of dependency that requires them to issue a residence permit to an EU citizen's third-country national family member, they do have to ascertain, when they are considering whether to withdraw a residence permit issued to a family member on the basis of national law whether this will mean that the EU citizen is forced to leave the EU as a whole if the MS authorities are familiar with the fact that the third-country national has family ties with an EU citizen. The principle of national procedural autonomy and Art. 47 Charter apply to decisions to withdraw a third-country national family member's residence permit to protect national security. Where this is the case, the person concerned has to be able to acquaint himself with the reasons why the MS has invoked national security either by reading the decision himself, or by communicating those reasons to him upon request. This right is without prejudice to the court's right to be informed of the reasons underlying the decision by the competent authorities. It does not preclude MS from using information that has been provided to them by their national security authorities, as long as the decision withdrawing the residence permit provides reasons and it is evident that the decision has been taken after a specific assessment of all relevant facts, in the light of the principle of proportionality and fundamental rights have been observed, including, where appropriate, the best interest of the child. Art. 47 Charter requires MS to inform the person concerned or that person's representative of – at the very least – the substance of the grounds on which the decision taken against his or her is based. MS may decide to restrict the disclosure of some or all of the information in the file. However procedures ensuring access to classified information 'together with a complete prohibition on using the information thus obtained for the purposes of the administrative procedure or any judicial proceedings' (cons. 98) amounts to a breach of the rights of defence. Likewise, it is insufficient that the court hearing the case on the withdrawal of the right of residence has access to the information. Art 47 Charter does not require that the national court assessing the legality of a decision based on classified information is competent to assess whether the classification is lawful and provide access to all or the essence of the information where it considers that the classification is unlawful. Respect for the rights of defence does, however, require that that court draws 'the appropriate conclusions from any decision taken by the competent authorities not to disclose all or part of the grounds for that decision and the evidence relating thereto' (cons. 116).

Residence

In S.N. a.o. (C-540/22) the issue is whether the free movement of services guaranteed by Art. 56 and 57 TFEU include a right derived therefrom of residence in a MS for third-country workers who may be employed in that MS by a service provider established in another MS without an individual residence permit? In this case a Slovak undertaking had posted Ukrainian workers to a Dutch company in order to carry out work in the Netherlands. The Ukrainians hold temporary residence permits issued by the Slovak authorities. In accordance with Dutch law, the Ukrainians must also obtain Dutch residence permits after the expiry of a 90-day period. In addition, fees are collected for each permit application. In its judgment, the Court holds that the obligation, for service providers established in another Member State, to apply for a residence permit for each posted third-country worker, so that that worker may have a secure document, proving that the posting is lawful, constitutes a measure appropriate for attaining the objective of increasing legal certainty for such workers. That permit is proof of their right to reside in the host Member State. The objective to check that the worker concerned does not represent a threat to public policy is also capable of justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services. The amount of the fees cannot be excessive or unreasonable and must approximately correspond to the administrative costs.

New Opinions

Exit and Entry

Mirin (C-4/23) concerns the intersection between EU free movement law and Member States' competences in civil status issues. The applicant is a dual Romanian and British national who was registered female at birth. While living in the UK, the applicant had his name and title changed from female to male and was issued with a new driving licence, passport, and a gender recognition certificate in accordance with UK laws. The applicant requested the Romanian authorities to amend his birth certificate concerning his first name, sex and personal numeric code to reflect his male gender and to issue him with a new birth certificate. This request was denied by the administration since it requires a final judicial decision by a Romanian court. The applicant complains that this condition amounts to an obstacle to the exercise of his EU rights under Articles 20, 21 and 18 TFEU in conjunction with Articles 1, 20, 21 and 7 EU Charter. His argument is that the Romanian procedures have been found by the ECtHR as lacking clarity and foresee ability making a different decision from that of the UK authorities possible.
AG De La Tour advises the Court to rule irrelevant the fact that the request for the birth certificate was made when EU law was no longer applicable in the UK. On the substance of the claim, the AG advises the Court to rule that EU law precludes the authorities of a Member State to refuse to recognise and register in the birth certificate of one of its own nationals the first name and gender identity that were lawfully declared and acquired in another Member State. Judicial or administrative procedures for change of sex or gender cannot constitute obstacles to what should be an automatic recognition. The AG proposes to limit the automatic recognition of such identity details to the birth certificate without necessarily extending it to other civil status issues such as marriage and parentage. The legal argument used is that the automatic recognition stems from Article 21 TFEU and is needed for the exercise of the right to free movement since the identity details in the birth certificate are necessary for the issuance of an ID card or passport.

The case Pensionsversicherung (C-323/23) was withdrawn after reference to CJEU 2 Feb. 2024, C-488/21. Also case Kinderrechtencoalitie (C-280/22) was withdrawn after reference to CJEU 21 Mar 2024, C-61/22.

7 Case Law

7.1 CJEU Judgments

☞ CJEU 15 July 2021, C-535/19 A. v Min. (LV) EU:C:2021:595
AG 11 Feb 2021 Subject: Equal Treatment
* Art. 7(1)(b)+24 Cit. Dir.
Ref. from Augusta tiesa (Supreme Court), Latvia, 9 July 2019
* The Court is asked whether publicly funded health care can be classed as 'sickness benefits'. And if so, whether MS are permitted to refuse Union citizens who do not, at that time, have worker status, ifsuch benefits — which are granted to their nationals and the family members of a Union citizen with worker status who are in the same situation — in order to avoid disproportionate requests for social benefits that will affect the availability of health care.
The CJEU confirmed the right of economically inactive EU citizens who have exercised their free movement rights, to be affiliated to the compulsory public sickness insurance system of their host-Member State. The difference in treatment between, on the one hand, an Italian national A, who was lawfully resident in Latvia on the basis of Art. 7(1)(b) Dir. 2004/38 and who could rely on Art. 24(1), and, on the other hand, economically inactive Latvian nationals, the CJEU found cannot be justified by a legitimate objective, i.e. the protection of public finances, and is not proportionate. However, to prevent economically inactive EU citizens from becoming an unreasonable burden on the public finances of the host-MS access to a MS's compulsory public health system does not have to come free of charge

☞ CJEU 6 Oct. 2021, C-35/20 A. v Syyttäjä (FI) EU:C:2021:813
AG 3 Jun 2021 EU:C:2021:456
* Art. 21(1) TFEU Subject: Exit and Entry
Ref. from Korkein oikeus, Finland, 24 Jan. 2020
* The right of Union citizens to free movement must, be interpreted as not precluding national legislation by which a MS obliges its nationals, on pain of criminal penalties, to carry a valid identity card or passport when travelling to another MS, by whatever means of transport and by whatever route, provided that the detailed rules for those penalties comply with the general principles of EU law, including those of proportionality and non-discrimination.
The right of Union citizens to freedom of movement must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation by which a MS requires its nationals to carry a valid identity card or passport, on pain of criminal sanctions, when they enter its territory from another MS, provided that that obligation does not make the right of entry conditional and that the detailed rules on penalties for failure to comply with that obligation comply with the general principles of EU law, including those of proportionality and non-discrimination. A journey to the MS concerned from another MS made on board a pleasure boat and through international waters is listed, under the conditions laid down in the second paragraph of point 3.2.5 of Annex VI to that regulation, among the cases in which the submission of such a document may be requested.
Art. 21(1) TFEU and Artt. 4 + 36 of Dir. 2004/38, read in the light of Art. 49(3) of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding rules on criminal sanctions by which a MS makes the crossing of its national border without a valid identity card or passport punishable by a fine which may, by way of example, amount to 20% of the offender's net monthly income, where such a fine is not proportionate to the seriousness of the offence, which is of a minor nature.
The CJEU confirmed its consistent case law that MSs may oblige their own nationals to carry a valid identity card or passport when they cross the internal border in order to travel to and from another MS. Violations of this obligation may be penalised under criminal law as long as the sanction is proportional and non-discriminatory. A financial sanction that amounts 20% of the offender's net monthly income, the Court labels as disproportionate to the seriousness of the offence, which it qualifies as 'minor by nature'.

* Art. 17(1)(a) Cit. Dir. Subject: Residence
Ref. from Oberster Gerichtshof, Austria, 18 Jan. 2019
* Article 17(1)(a) must be interpreted as meaning that, for the purpose of acquiring the right of permanent residence in the host Member State before completion of a continuous period of 5 years of residence, the conditions that a person must have been working in that Member State at least for the preceding 12 months and must have resided in that Member State continuously for more than 3 years apply to workers who, at the time they stop working, have reached the age laid down by the law of that Member State for entitlement to an old age pension.
The CJEU ruled that for the purpose of acquiring a right of permanent residence before completion of a continuous period of 5 years of residence in Art. 17(1)(a) Dir. 2004/38, workers must satisfy cumulatively the two conditions set out in that provision, namely:
(a) they must have worked in their host MS during - at least - the preceding 12 months; and
(b) they must have resided in that MS continuously for more than 3 years.
The mere fact that a worker, at the time that she stops working, has reached the legal age that entitles her to an old age pension in the host MS is irrelevant in the context of Art. 17(1)(a) Dir. 2004/38.

☞ CJEU 3 Oct. 2023, C-235/22 Abel EU:C:2023:730
* Art. 18+21 TFEU Subject: Equal Treatment
Art. 10 WA
Ref. from Audiencia Nacional, Spain, 28 Mar. 2022
* This case is about the interpretation of the Withdrawal Agreement (Brexit) and in particular about the question whether the information and cooperation mechanism, enshrined in CJEU case law (such as C-182/15, C-191/16, C-897/16), applies in the context of the extradition, to a third country, of a United Kingdom national who has exercised his right of free movement in a MS of the Union before the entry into force of the withdrawal agreement, on 1 Feb. 2020, when, in that MS, the extradition of its own nationals outside the Union is possible. This question, however, is irrelevant because mr Abel is already extradited to the US. Case dismissed.

☞ CJEU 17 Nov. 2011, C-434/10 Aladzhov EU:C:2011:750
AG 6 Sep 2011 EU:C:2011:547
* Art. 4+27 Cit. Dir. Subject: Exit and Entry
Ref. from Administrativen sad Sofia-grad, Bulgaria, 6 Sep. 2010
* Even if a measure imposing a prohibition on leaving the territory has been adopted under the conditions laid down in Article 27(1), the conditions laid down in Article 27(2) thereof preclude such a measure:
– if it is founded solely on the existence of the tax liability of the company of which he is one of the joint managers, and on the basis of that status alone, without any specific assessment of the personal conduct of the person concerned and with no reference to any threat of any kind which he represents to public policy, and – if the prohibition on leaving the territory is not appropriate to ensure the achievement of the objective it pursues and goes beyond what is necessary to attain it.

☞ CJEU 8 May 2013, C-529/11 Alarape & Tijani EU:C:2013:290
AG 15 Jan 2013 EU:C:2013:9
* Art. 10 Cit. Dir. Subject: Residence
Ref. from Upper Tribunal (Immigration and Asylum Chamber), UK, 17 Sep. 2011 and Family Members
* The parent of a child who has attained the age of majority and who has obtained access to education on the basis of Article 12 of Regulation 1612/68 as amended by Directive 2004/38, may continue to have a derived right of residence under that article if that child remains in need of the presence and care of that parent in order to be able to continue and to complete his or her education, which it is for the referring court to assess, taking into account all the circumstances of the case before it.

* This case concerns the compatibility of the UEFA and the Belgian Football Association rules on 'home-grown' players with Art. 101 (competition) and Art. 45 TFEU. This is not the first time that the CJEU was asked to rule if the UEFA regulations which require professional football clubs to use a minimum of 'home-grown' players amount to unjustified indirect discrimination since they restrict the free movement of EU workers (e.g. Bosman judgment C-415/93).
The Court finds that in principle Article 45 TFEU precludes measures that require football associations to field a minimum number of players trained in the territorial jurisdiction of that association. However, such measures can be justified if they are suitable for ensuring in a consistent and systemic manner the attainment of the objective of encouraging at the local level the recruitment and training of young professional football players and will not go beyond what is necessary to achieve this objective. In deciding on the proportionality and justification issues, the national court is instructed to pay attention to the fact that by placing on the same footing any young player who has been trained by a club from the same national association, the rules may incentivise large clubs to free ride by buying their home grown players from other national teams.

Firstly, the CJEU ruled that Arts 18 and 21 TFEU are applicable to the extradition request concerning an EU citizen irrespective of the moment when he acquired that citizenship.*
Secondly, the MS receiving the extradition request must inform the EU citizen's State of nationality of the third State's request, including all the elements of fact and law communicated by the third State and of any changes in the situation of the requested person that may be relevant to the possibility of issuing a European Arrest Warrant (EAW). Where the State of nationality fails to issue an EAW within a reasonable time limit, as set by the requested State, the latter may extradite the EU citizen without having to wait for the State of nationality to waive an EAW through a formal decision.
Thirdly, Arts 18 and 21 TFEU only oblige the requested MS to decide whether surrender to the State of nationality is less prejudicial EU citizen's right to free movement than extradition to a third State. They do not oblige the requested State to refuse extradition and conduct the criminal prosecution itself, even if this possibility exists under national law.

Ref. from Appeal Tribunal for Northern Ireland, UK, 30 Dec. 2020
* This case concerns an EU citizen in Northern Ireland who holds a temporary leave to remain, which does not give access to social assistance. According to the Advocate General the question referred to the CJEU concerns, in essence, the protection owed to an EU citizen with respect to access to social assistance, in application of the principle of equal treatment, when the host MS has granted her a right of residence, based on national law, where the conditions in national law are more favourable than those in Directive 2004/38.
The AG had advised the CJEU to qualify the refusal of social assistance by a MS to an economically inactive national of another MS on the sole basis of his or her right of residence, as indirect discrimination on the ground of nationality and instruct the referring court to ascertain whether this is the case and if so, whether the national legislation is disproportional as it goes beyond what is necessary to maintain the equilibrium of the social assistance system of the host MS.
The CJEU, however, decided otherwise. It found that the UK legislation on Universal Credit, which deprives Union citizens who have a right to reside on the basis of the scheme established in the context of Brexit but who do not satisfy all of the conditions of Dir. 2004/38, from this benefit is compatible with the principle of equal treatment as guaranteed by EU law. The CJEU instructed the competent national authorities to check whether a refusal to grant social assistance under this scheme does not expose the Union citizen and his or her children to a risk of an infringement of their rights enshrined in the Charter, in particular the right to respect for human dignity and private and family life and the rights of the child. In the context of that examination, those authorities may take into account all means of assistance provided for by national law from which the citizen concerned and her children are actually entitled to benefit.

Such an assessment must take into account, in the best interests of the child concerned, all the specific circumstances, including the age of the child, the child's physical and emotional development, the extent of his emotional ties both to the Union citizen parent and to the third-country national parent, and the risks which separation from the latter might entail for the child's equilibrium.*
Article 20 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from providing that the right of residence in its territory of a third-country national, who is a parent of a minor child that is a national of that Member State and who is responsible for the primary day-to-day care of that child, is subject to the requirement that the third-country national must provide evidence to prove that a refusal of a right of residence to the third-country national parent would deprive the child of the genuine enjoyment of the substance of the rights pertaining to the child's status as a Union citizen, by obliging the child to leave the territory of the European Union, as a whole. It is however for the competent authorities of the Member State concerned to undertake, on the basis of the evidence provided by the third-country national, the necessary enquiries in order to be able to assess, in the light of all the specific circumstances, whether a refusal would have such consequences.

The procedural guarantees laid down in Arts. 30 and 31 of Dir. 2004/38 apply by analogy and subject to the necessary adjustments to such a TCN family member whom the host State wishes to expel on grounds of unlawful residence. The Court clarifies that the right of residence of a TCN family member who has resided with an EU citizen on the basis of Art. 6 of Dir. 2004/38 in a host State, is lost if he no longer resides in the host State with the EU citizen.
Directive 2004/38, more importantly its procedural rights, however still govern any decision to expel that TCN family member by the host State authorities. The words 'by analogy' in Art. 15 Dir. 2004/38 mean that Arts. 30 and 31 Dir. 2004/38 apply to such decisions to the extent that these provisions also apply to expulsion decisions made on grounds of public policy, public security or public health and subject to the necessary adjustments. Art. 15(3) Dir. 2004/38 explicitly prohibits imposing an entry ban if the expulsion decision concerns a situation of loss of residence rights.
In this case the question is: what procedural rights do TCN family members of EU citizens enjoy in expulsion cases when they no longer qualify as a beneficiary of Dir. 2004/38/EC because the EU citizen from which they derive their rights no longer resides in the host State?
The Court ruled that Art. 15 of Dir. 2004/38 applies to the decision to expel a TCN on the ground that this person no longer has a right of residence under the Directive where that TCN married an EU citizen who, at the time, was exercising his right to freedom of movement and where the EU citizen subsequently returns to the State of his nationality.

Ref. from Upper Tribunal (Administrative Appeals Chamber), UK, 25 Mar. 2011
* Article 12 of Regulation 1612/68 (now Art. 10 Reg 492/2011) must be interpreted as conferring on the person who is the primary carer of a migrant worker's or former migrant worker's child who is attending educational courses in the host Member State a right of residence in that State, although that provision cannot be interpreted as conferring such a right on the person who is the primary carer of the child of a person who is self-employed.
Article 16(1) of Directive 2004/38 must be interpreted as meaning that a European Union citizen who is a national of a Member State which recently acceded to the European Union may, pursuant to that provision, rely on a right of permanent residence where he or she has resided in the host Member State for a continuous period of more than five years, part of which was completed before the accession of the former State to the European Union, provided that the residence was in accordance with the conditions laid down in Article 7(1) of Directive 2004/38.

Ref. from Administrativen sad Veliko Tarnovo, Bulgaria, 12 Jan. 2022
* The Bulgarian court has raised questions concerning the interpretation of Art. 30 and 31 of the Withdrawal Agreement. The CJEU ruled that the objective of the Withdrawal Agreement (WA) with the United Kingdom (UK) is to protect rights that have been acquired before the transitional period ended that involve the nationals, legislation or territory of the UK. The case concerns a Bulgarian national who had worked in the UK for a number of years and returns to Bulgaria after the transitional period has ended, where she applies for unemployment benefits. The Bulgarian authorities have refused to grant her an unemployment benefit, stating that the WA does not apply to her situation as she has interrupted her cross-border situation by returning to Bulgaria after the transitional period had expired. The CJEU first establishes that Art. 31(1) WA explicitly provides that Reg. 883/2004 applies to beneficiaries of Title II WA. It then considers whether that regulation would have applied to D.V. if the UK had not left the EU. According to Art. 65(5)(a) Reg. 883/2004 eligibility for an unemployment benefit can be conditional on having completed periods of insurance in the MS of which the legislation on benefits applies, as is the case in Bulgaria. As D.V. has not completed periods of insurance in Bulgaria after her return to that MS, she cannot rely on Art. 65(2) Reg. 883/2004 to claim unemployment benefits in Bulgaria.

At stake is the issue of a self-employed mother. Art. 3(2)(e) LTR Dir. must be interpreted as meaning that the concept of residence 'solely on temporary grounds', which is referred to therein, does not cover the residence of a third-country national under Art. 20 TFEU within the territory of the Member State of which the Union citizen concerned is a national.
This case concerns the right of a parent of minor EU citizens resident in their MS of nationality who have been issued an Art. 20 TFEU status right to long term residence after five years uninterrupted residence. The CJEU first establishes that, as there is no reference to national law, 'temporary by nature' in Art. 3(2)(e) Directive 2003/109 is an autonomous Union law concept. Then it holds that the right of residence under Art. 20 TFEU does not qualify as 'temporary by nature'. Therefore parents of minor EU citizens are eligible for the long-term residence status after five years of uninterrupted residence in the Member State of which their minor EU citizen child is a national.

2. The examination of the other questions referred for a preliminary ruling has not revealed any factor capable of affecting the validity of Council Decision (EU) 2020/135 of 30 January 2020 on the Brexit Agreement.
In this case the Court rules that Arts. 9 and 50 TEU and Arts. 0-22 TFEU read in conjunction with the Withdrawal Agreement concluded between the EU and the UK are to be interpreted as meaning that UK citizens have lost their status as EU citizen when the UK left the EU on 1 February 2020 as they are no longer nationals of an EU Member State. In this context it is irrelevant whether they have exercised free movement rights in the past. Loss of the status of EU citizenship also entails the loss of the right to vote for and stand as a candidate for the EP and in municipal elections of the host-Member State; no proportionality test is required in this context. Art. 18 TFEU no longer covers the situation of the nationals of a State that has withdrawn its membership of the EU as from the moment of the withdrawal the citizens of that State are third-country nationals and according to consistent case law Art. 18 TFEU does not apply to the situation of third-country nationals. As far as the arguments put forward, challenging the validity of the Withdrawal Agreement, the Court does not find any reason to assume that the validity of the Decision approving that Agreement is affected.

* In this case the CJEU confirms that following the entry into force of the Withdrawal Agreement between the UK and the EU, British nationals who have exercised their right to free movement no longer benefit from a right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament in their Member State of residence. Member States are not required to grant that right to persons who are no longer Union citizens. The fact that such former EU citizens have not been able to vote in the Brexit referendum was judged irrelevant since it was based on electoral law choices made by the UK, thus not linked to EU law. Furthermore, the validity of the Withdrawal Agreement is not called into question by the fact that it fails to recognise a right to vote in EP elections or a right to stand as candidate to former EU citizens.

In order to be eligible for a new right of residence under Art. 6(1) of that directive in that same territory, the Union citizen in respect of whom such an expulsion decision has been taken must not only have physically left the territory of the host Member State, but have also effectively and effectively ended his stay in that territory, so that on his return to that territory it cannot be assumed that his stay is in reality a continuation of his previous stay in that same territory.
It is for the referring court to determine whether that is the case, taking into account all the specific circumstances which characterize the specific situation of the Union citizen concerned. If such verification shows that the Union citizen has not effectively and effectively terminated his temporary stay in the territory of the host Member State, that Member State is not required to adopt a new expulsion decision on the basis of the same facts as those which led to the expulsion decision already taken with regard to the citizen of the Union, but may rely on the latter decision in order to oblige that citizen to leave his territory.

It reiterates that art. 14(4)(b) of Dir. 2004/38 sees to the right to remain as a jobseeker (Alimanovic, C -67/14), and adds to this finding that Art. 6 of that Directive applies to all EU Citizens during the first three months of their stay in a MS. From the moment of registration, a jobseeker enjoys 'a reasonable period' to become acquainted with potentially suitable employment opportunities and to take the necessary steps to obtain employment. The CJEU qualifies a six-month period (Antonissen) as sufficient 'not [to] call into question the effectiveness of Art. 45 TFEU'. During this initial period, MSs may only require evidence that employment is still being sought. On expiry of this period, MSs may also require evidence that there is a genuine chance that the jobseeker will be engaged. National courts must take the labour market situation that corresponds with the jobseekers qualifications into consideration. It is worth pointing out that the opinion of AG Ćapeta offered an in-depth analysis of the unreasonable burden argument made by the Irish government, whereas the Court's ruling follows a classic interpretation of workers' rights. As such, the Court ruled that the family member of an EU worker is entitled to social benefits as an indirect beneficiary of the worker's right to equal treatment concerning social advantages as per Art. 7(2) Reg. 492/2011. * This case concerns an Estonian national who renounced her nationality and therefore her EU citizenship in order to acquire Austrian nationality. Upon renunciation of her Estonian nationality, J.Y. became stateless. The Austrian authorities revoked the assurance given to the applicant that she would be granted Austrian nationality and rejected her application on grounds that she committed several road offences prior to the assurance being given to her.
The CJEU ruled:
(1) The situation of a person who, having the nationality of one MS only, renounces that nationality and loses, as a result, his or her status of citizen of the Union, with a view to obtaining the nationality of another MS, following the assurance given by the authorities of the latter MS that he or she will be granted that nationality, falls, by reason of its nature and its consequences, within the scope of EU law where that assurance is revoked with the effect of preventing that person from recovering the status of citizen of the Union.
(2). Article 20 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that the competent national authorities and, as the case may be, the national courts of the host MS are required to ascertain whether the decision to revoke the assurance as to the grant of the nationality of that MS, which makes the loss of the status of citizen of the Union permanent for the person concerned, is compatible with the principle of proportionality in the light of the consequences it entails for that person's situation. That requirement of compatibility with the principle of proportionality is not satisfied where such a decision is based on administrative traffic offences which, under the applicable provisions of national law, give rise to a mere pecuniary penalty.

Art. 7(1) of Reg. 492/2011 does not preclude such a provision if the previously performed services are not equivalent but only useful for the performance of the function.
The CJEU ruled in this case on indirect discrimination. The question was whether previous professionally-relevant periods of services of a member of the teaching staff of a university in a MS can be recognized if these are not worked in that MS but elsewhere in the Union. The university of Vienna decided not to count this period of experience of more than 13 years in full but limited this period to 4 years. The Court ruled that such a calculus would discriminate EU citizens and that such a national provision is precluded (Art. 45 TFEU).
In addition the Court made it clear that such previous professionally-relevant periods of services could only be taken into account if these services are identical or equivalent to the services performed, excluding periods which can only be qualified as 'useful' (Art. 7(1) Reg. 492/2011).

It is for the national court to make the necessary findings of fact in order to ascertain whether the employment activities of the applicant in the main proceedings are sufficient to confer that status on him. The fact that the person entered the territory of the host Member State with the principal intention of pursuing a course of study is not relevant for determining whether he is a 'worker' within the meaning of Article 45 TFEU and, accordingly, whether he is entitled to that aid under the same terms as a national of the host Member State under Article 7(2) of Regulation 1612/68.

Art. 45 TFEU
Ref. from National Board of Appeal for Student Aid, Sweden, 25 Nov. 2020
* The applicant is the Swedish child of a Swedish worker. MCM was born and lived his entire life in Spain where his father worked for 20 years. In 2011, the father returned to Sweden to work but the child remained in Spain. The child's request for financial aid from Sweden to pursue his studies abroad (in Spain) was rejected because under Swedish law the child had to be resident in Sweden or show that he had a connection with Sweden. The CJEU ruled that a worker cannot rely on Art. 7 of Reg. 492/2011 to claim equal treatment in respect of social benefits (in casu, student finance) against the authorities of his state of origin. Unequal treatment experienced by a worker in his state of origin may nonetheless be covered by Art. 45 TFEU which has a larger scope than Art. 7 of Reg. 492/2011 since it prohibits 'any other measure liable to constitute an obstacle to freedom of movement for workers' (para 29). The CJEU agrees with AG Medina that workers can rely on Art. 45 TFEU against their state of nationality to challenge measures liable to prevent or deter them from leaving their country of origin (para 32).
The Court found that the Swedish legislation on the exportation of study finance could not be said to make the exercise of free movement rights less desirable since the award of the study finance would depend not only on the conduct of the father but also on a succession of hypothetical and uncertain future factors (para 34). Therefore, it ruled that the Swedish legislation cannot be interpreted as liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of the right to work by the father of the child. The Court's reasoning is based on the fact that the child had lived since birth in the host Member State and that the condition to show a connection with Sweden applied in respect of other nationals who did not meet the residence condition.
The CJEU ruled: Art. 45 TFEU and Art. 7(2) of Free Movement of Workers Regulation must be interpreted as meaning that those provisions do not preclude legislation of a MS by which the grant of financial aid for the pursuit of studies in the host MS, to the child of a person who has left the host MS in which that person worked in order to return to live in the first MS, of which he or she is a national, is made subject to the requirement that the child has a connection with the MS of origin, in a situation where:
 first, the child has lived since birth in the host MS and,*
 second, the MS of origin makes other nationals not satisfying the residence requirement and who apply for such financial aid to study in another MS subject to the requirement of the existence of a connection.*

* Art. 20 TFEU Subject: Equal Treatment and Exit and Entry
Ref. from Fővárosi Törvényszék, Hungary, 19 July 2021
* Though this case is primarily a Return Directive ruling, the Court also considers that when withdrawing residence rights and issuing entry bans, as provided for by the Return Directive, Member States have to consider the implications of such a withdrawal or ban for a third-country national's family members who are nationals of a Member State even if they have never exercised their right to move and reside in Article 20 TFEU. This implies that a measure that is justified for reasons of public order or national security has to take all relevant circumstances into account, in particular the best interest of the child, if there is a relationship of dependency between the third-country national and a minor EU citizen.
Art 20 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a MS from adopting a decision banning entry into the territory of the European Union in respect of a TCN, who is a family member of a Union citizen, a national of that MS who has never exercised his or her right to free movement, without having examined beforehand whether there is, between those persons, a relationship of dependency which would de facto compel that Union citizen to leave the territory of the European Union altogether in order to go with that family member and, if so, whether the grounds on which that decision was adopted allow a derogation from the derived right of residence of that TCN.
Art. 5 Return Dir. must be interpreted as precluding that a TCN, who should have been the addressee of a return decision, is the subject – in a direct extension of the decision which withdrew from him or her, for reasons connected with national security, his or her right of residence on the territory of the MS concerned – of a decision banning entry into the territory of the European Union, adopted for identical reasons, without consideration being given, beforehand, to his or her state of health and, where appropriate, his or her family life and the best interests of his or her minor child.
Art. 5 Return Dir. must be interpreted as meaning that, where a national court is seised of an action against an entry ban decision adopted pursuant to national legislation which is incompatible with that Article 5 and which cannot be interpreted consistently with it, that court must disapply that legislation to the extent that it does not comply with that article and, where necessary to ensure the full effectiveness of Article 5, apply that article directly in the dispute before it.
Art. 13 Return Dir. must be interpreted as precluding a national practice by which the administrative authorities of a MS refuse to apply a final court decision ordering the suspension of enforcement of an entry ban decision on the ground that that decision had already been the object of an alert in the Schengen Information System.
Although this judgment is primarily a Return Directive ruling, the Court also considers that when withdrawing residence rights and issuing entry bans, as provided for by the Return Directive, Member States have to consider the implications of such a withdrawal or ban for a third-country national's family members who are nationals of a Member State even if they have never exercised their right to move and reside in Article 20 TFEU. This implies that a measure that is justified for reasons of public order or national security has to take all relevant circumstances into account, in particular the best interest of the child, if there is a relationship of dependency between the third-country national and a minor EU citizen.

Ref. from Szeged High Court, Hungary, 8 Aug. 2022

* The CJEU established that though MS are not obliged to examine systematically and on their own initiative whether there is a relationship of dependency that requires them to issue a residence permit to an EU citizen's third-country national family member, they do have to ascertain, when they are considering whether to withdraw a residence permit issued to a family member on the basis of national law whether this will mean that the EU citizen is forced to leave the EU as a whole if the MS authorities are familiar with the fact that the third-country national has family ties with an EU citizen. The principle of national procedural autonomy and Art. 47 Charter apply to decisions to withdraw a third-country national family member's residence permit to protect national security. Where this is the case, the person concerned has to be able to acquaint himself with the reasons why the MS has invoked national security either by reading the decision himself, or by communicating those reasons to him upon request. This right is without prejudice to the court's right to be informed of the reasons underlying the decision by the competent authorities. It does not preclude MS from using information that has been provided to them by their national security authorities, as long as the decision withdrawing the residence permit provides reasons and it is evident that the decision has been taken after a specific assessment of all relevant facts, in the light of the principle of proportionality and fundamental rights have been observed, including, where appropriate, the best interest of the child. Art. 47 Charter requires MS to inform the person concerned or that person's representative of – at the very least – the substance of the grounds on which the decision taken against his or her is based. MS may decide to restrict the disclosure of some or all of the information in the file. However procedures ensuring access to classified information 'together with a complete prohibition on using the information thus obtained for the purposes of the administrative procedure or any judicial proceedings' (cons. 98) amounts to a breach of the rights of defence. Likewise, it is insufficient that the court hearing the case on the withdrawal of the right of residence has access to the information. Art 47 Charter does not require that the national court assessing the legality of a decision based on classified information is competent to assess whether the classification is lawful and provide access to all or the essence of the information where it considers that the classification is unlawful. Respect for the rights of defence does, however, require that that court draws 'the appropriate conclusions from any decision taken by the competent authorities not to disclose all or part of the grounds for that decision and the evidence relating thereto' (cons. 116).

Therefore, the conditions for granting a derived right of residence to a third-country national who is a family member of that Union citizen, in the latter's Member State of origin, should not, in principle, be more strict than those provided for by that directive for the grant of a derived right of residence to a third-country national who is a family member of a Union citizen who has exercised his right of freedom of movement by becoming established in a Member State other than the Member State of which he is a national.*

The issue of any expulsion measure is conditional on the requirement that the personal conduct of the individual concerned must represent a genuine, present threat affecting one of the fundamental interests of society or of the host Member State, which implies, in general, the existence in the individual concerned of a propensity to act in the same way in the future. Before taking an expulsion decision, the host Member State must take account of considerations such as how long the individual concerned has resided on its territory, his/her age, state of health, family and economic situation, social and cultural integration into that State and the extent of his/her links with the country of origin.

To merit the conclusion that a previous arrest represents 'a genuine, present and sufficiently serious there to one of the fundamental interests of society' MS have to establish that there are 'consistent, objective and precise factors which allow for the reliability of the suspicions weighing on that person as a result of that arrest' (cons. 36). In the admissibility assessment, the CJEU confirms that where MS decide to extend the scope of EU law, in Spain Dir. 2004/38 also applies to Spanish nationals who have not – previously - exercised free movement rights, it is competent to answer preliminary references made by national courts to ensure uniform application of those rules.*

Directive 2004/38 and Return Directive 2008/115 do not preclude a decision to return an EU citizen, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from being adopted by the same authorities and according to the same procedure as a decision to return a third-country national staying illegally referred to in Article 6(1) of Directive 2008/115, provided that the transposition measures of Directive 2004/38 which are more favourable to that EU citizen are applied.
The principle of effectiveness does not preclude a legal practice according to which a national of a Member State who is subject to a return order in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings may not rely, in support of an action against that order, on the unlawfulness of the exclusion order previously adopted against him, in so far as the person concerned had effectively the possibility to contest that latter order in good time in the light of the provisions of Directive 2004/38.
Article 30 of Directive 2004/38 requires the Member States to take every appropriate measure with a view to ensuring that the person concerned understands the content and implications of a decision adopted under Article 27(1) of that directive but that it does not require that decision to be notified to him in a language he understands or which it is reasonable to assume he understands, although he did not bring an application to that effect.

Article 20 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that a relationship of dependency, such as to justify the grant of a derived right of residence under that article, does not exist on the sole ground that the national of a MS, who is of full age and has never exercised the freedom of movement, and his or her spouse, who is of full age and a TCN, are required to live together, by virtue of the obligations arising out of the marriage under the law of the MS of which the Union citizen is a national.

– it is, however, incumbent upon the Member States to ensure that their legislation contains criteria which enable those persons to obtain a decision on their application for entry and residence that is founded on an extensive examination of their personal circumstances and, in the event of refusal, is justified by reasons;
– the Member States have a wide discretion when selecting those criteria, but the criteria must be consistent with the normal meaning of the term 'facilitate' and of the words relating to dependence used in Article 3(2) and must not deprive that provision of its effectiveness; and
– every applicant is entitled to a judicial review of whether the national legislation and its application satisfy those conditions.
In order to fall within the category, referred to in Article 3(2) of Directive 2004/38, of family members who are 'dependants' of a Union citizen, the situation of dependence must exist in the country from which the family member concerned comes, at the very least at the time when he applies to join the Union citizen on whom he is dependent.
On a proper construction of Article 3(2) of Directive 2004/38, the Member States may, in the exercise of their discretion, impose particular requirements relating to the nature and duration of dependence, provided that those requirements are consistent with the normal meaning of the words relating to the dependence referred to in Article 3(2)(a) of the directive and do not deprive that provision of its effectiveness.
The question whether issue of the residence card referred to in Article 10 of Directive 2004/38 may be conditional on the requirement that the situation of dependence for the purposes of Article 3(2)(a) of that directive has endured in the host Member State does not fall within the scope of the directive.

* National rules which provide that a person's surnames and forenames may be entered on the certificates of civil status of that State only in a form which complies with the rules governing the spelling of the official national language relate to a situation which does not come within the scope of Council Directive 2000/43/EC of 29 June 2000 implementing the principle of equal treatment between persons irrespective of racial or ethnic origin.
Article 21 TFEU must be interpreted as:
– not precluding the competent authorities of a Member State from refusing, pursuant to national rules which provide that a person's surnames and forenames may be entered on the certificates of civil status of that State only in a form which complies with the rules governing the spelling of the official national language, to amend, on the birth certificate and marriage certificate of one of its nationals, the surname and forename of that person in accordance with the spelling rules of another Member State;
– not precluding the competent authorities of a Member State from refusing, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings and pursuant to those same rules, to amend the joint surname of a married couple who are citizens of the Union, as it appears on the certificates of civil status issued by the Member State of origin of one of those citizens, in a form which complies with the spelling rules of that latter State, on condition that that refusal does not give rise, for those Union citizens, to serious inconvenience at administrative, professional and private levels, this being a matter which it is for the national court to decide. If that proves to be the case, it is also for that court to determine whether the refusal to make the amendment is necessary for the protection of the interests which the national rules are designed to secure and is proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued;
– not precluding the competent authorities of a Member State from refusing, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings and pursuant to those same rules, to amend the marriage certificate of a citizen of the Union who is a national of another Member State in such a way that the forenames of that citizen are entered on that certificate with diacritical marks as they were entered on the certificates of civil status issued by his Member State of origin and in a form which complies with the rules governing the spelling of the official national language of that latter State.

* The CJEU first of all clarifies the exemption for TCN family members of EU citizens from holding a visa when entering a MS other than the MS state where they are permanent resident. The CJEU interpreted the short stay visa exemption in Art. 5(2) of Dir. 2004/38 as meaning that the possession of a permanent residence card referred to in Art. 20 of that directive also applies to a TCN family member of a Union citizen with a permanent residence card.
Secondly, the fact that the permanent residence card is issued by a MS which is not part of the Schengen area is irrelevant. Thirdly, as a MS can only issue a permanent residence card ex Art. 20(1) of Dir. 2004/38 to persons who have the status of TCN family member of an EU citizen, possession of a permanent residence card constitutes sufficient proof that the holder of that card is a family member of a Union citizen. The person concerned is entitled, without further verification or justification, to enter the territory of a MS without a short stay visa under Art. 5(2) of that directive.

Art. 24(2) of Dir. 2004/38 must be interpreted as meaning that it is not applicable to such legislation.
In this case the Court held that as a family benefit falls within the scope of Reg. 4883/2004, mobile EU citizens enjoy equal treatment by virtue of Art. 4 of that Regulation in their host-MS if their right to reside follows from Art. 6(1) read in conjunction with Art. 14(1) Dir. 2004/38. Art. 24(2) Dir. 2004/38 does not apply to these cases as family benefits are not intended to cover an individual's basic needs, but rather, are granted automatically to those who satisfy objective criteria without an individual assessment.

However, it is for the competent national authorities to facilitate the entry and residence of such a child as one of the other family members of a citizen of the Union pursuant to Article 3(2)(a) of that directive, read in the light of Article 7 and Article 24(2) of the Charter, by carrying out a balanced and reasonable assessment of all the current and relevant circumstances of the case which takes account of the various interests in play and, in particular, of the best interests of the child concerned.
In the event that it is established, following that assessment, that the child and its guardian, who is a citizen of the Union, are called to lead a genuine family life and that that child is dependent on its guardian, the requirements relating to the fundamental right to respect for family life, combined with the obligation to take account of the best interests of the child, demand, in principle, that that child be granted a right of entry and residence in order to enable it to live with its guardian in his or her host Member State.
This case is on the issue of a foster child and whether the concept of a direct descendant of an EU citizen includes a child that has been put in the care and legal guardianship of an EU citizen under the Islamic Kafala system. The CJEU ruled that such a child can not be seen as a direct descendant because the Kafala system does not create any parent-child relationship. However, the CJEU also ruled that if the child and its guardian lead a genuine family life, the fundamental right to respect for family life and the obligation to take account of the best interests of the child demand that the child be granted a right of entry and residence to enable it to live with its guardian in his or her host Member State.

* In this case the issue is whether the free movement of services guaranteed by Art. 56 and 57 TFEU include a right derived therefrom of residence in a MS for third-country workers who may be employed in that MS by a service provider established in another MS without an individual residence permit? In this case a Slovak undertaking had posted Ukrainian workers to a Dutch company in order to carry out work in the Netherlands. The Ukrainians hold temporary residence permits issued by the Slovak authorities. In accordance with Dutch law, the Ukrainians must also obtain Dutch residence permits after the expiry of a 90-day period. In addition, fees are collected for each permit application. In its judgment, the Court holds that the obligation, for service providers established in another Member State, to apply for a residence permit for each posted third-country worker, so that that worker may have a secure document, proving that the posting is lawful, constitutes a measure appropriate for attaining the objective of increasing legal certainty for such workers. That permit is proof of their right to reside in the host Member State. The objective to check that the worker concerned does not represent a threat to public policy is also capable of justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services. The amount of the fees cannot be excessive or unreasonable and must approximately correspond to the administrative costs.

Ref. from Verwaltungsgericht Düsseldorf, Germany, 8 Nov. 2022
joined cases: C-684/22+C-685/22+C-686/22
* These joined cases concern the compatibility of German nationality law with EU citizenship (Article 20 TFEU), which allows for the automatic loss of German nationality upon the voluntary acquisition of another nationality. The applicants are former naturalised German citizens of Turkish origin who, following naturalization in Germany, have reacquired Turkish nationality without requesting the permission of the competent national authorities to retain their German nationality. This condition was introduced in law as of 1 January 2000, while cases up to 31 December 1999 were covered by different rules. All applicants lost ex lege their German nationality when the authorities became aware of their reacquisition of Turkish nationality. The CJEU was asked to rule on the compatibility with Article 20 TFEU of:
(a) the German advance permission procedure for retaining nationality upon voluntary acquisition of another nationality and
(b) the fact that in this permission procedure the consequences of the loss of German and EU citizenship are not examined from the perspective of EU law. Rather, what is examined is the existence of a special reason for acquisition of another nationality while retaining the German one.
The CJEU ruled that protecting the special bond of nationality by prohibiting dual nationality is a legitimate interest for EU states which they can pursue if their laws do not violate the principle of proportionality. Automatic loss of nationality and the requirement of an advance permission were not considered inconsistent with the principle of proportionality as long as they allow for an individual examination of the consequences of loss of EU citizenship. The effectiveness of the rights of EU citizenship require that the person is duly informed about the possibility to request an examination and the time limit for it, which is for the national court to examine. Relevant factors include the fact that naturalization required the applicants to give up their Turkish nationality and the context in which they reapplied for Turkish nationality, namely the reform of German nationality law which may have had a negative impact on the possibility to effectively initiate the advance permission procedure. If the applicants were not duly informed, there should be a possibility to carry out the individual examination as an ancillary issue in the context of an application for a travel document or any other document showing nationality, including the possibility to order the ex tunc recovery of nationality.

The applicants are a UK national (S.R.S.) who has moved to Ireland for work-related reasons in 2015, and his cousin (A.A.) a Pakistan national who moved to the UK for study purposes and who joined S.R.S. in Ireland two months after his move. In the UK, they lived together with other direct family members of S.R.S. in the same house for which S.R.S. paid the rent. Irish authorities rejected A.A.'s application for residence on grounds that mere cohabitation at the same address was not sufficient to establish that S.R.S. and A.A. were members of the same household, nor that S.R.S. was the head of that household as required under Irish law.*
According to the CJEU Art. 3(2)(a) Citizens Dir. must be interpreted as meaning that the concept of 'any other family members who are members of the household of the Union citizen having the primary right of residence', mentioned in that provision, refers to persons who have a relationship of dependence with that citizen, based on close and stable personal ties, forged within the same household, in the context of a shared domestic life going beyond a mere temporary cohabitation entered into for reasons of pure convenience. * This case raises the question which state should pay compensation for loss of earnings suffered by frontier workers ordered to isolate because they tested positive for Covid-19 by the competent health authorities of their state of residence. Under Austrian law compensation could be paid only in respect of workers who had been ordered to isolate by the Austrian competent authority. The Court was asked to clarify is such compensation could be seen as a sickness benefit under Reg. 883/2004 and if not, if Art. 45 TFEU and 7 Reg. 492/2011 preclude compensation being paid only in respect of workers ordered to isolate by Austrian authorities. The Court clarifies that compensation for isolation is not a sickness benefit since it does not meet the essential characteristics of such a benefit under Reg. 883/2004 since its aim is not the recovery of the person concerned but the protection of public health. Finally, the Court ruled that the Austrian legislation introduced an indirect residence requirement that in the absence of justification amounts to indirect discrimination in the enjoyment of social benefits under Art 7(2) Reg. 492/2011.
Art. 3(1)(a) Reg. 883/2004 must be interpreted as meaning that compensation, financed by the State, which is due to workers for the pecuniary disadvantages caused by the impediment to their employment during their isolation as persons infected with, suspected of being infected with, or suspected of being contagious with COVID-19 does not constitute a 'sickness benefit', referred to in that provision, and does not therefore come within the scope of that regulation.
Art. 45 TFEU and Art. 7 of Reg. 492/2011 must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a MS under which the granting of compensation for loss of earnings suffered by workers as a result of isolation ordered following a positive COVID-19 test result is subject to the condition that the imposition of the isolation measure be ordered by an authority of that MS under that legislation.

In the context of that examination, the authorities and the courts must determine whether the loss of the nationality of the Member State concerned, when it entails the loss of citizenship of the Union and the rights attaching thereto, has due regard to the principle of proportionality so far as concerns the consequences of that loss for the situation of each person concerned and, if relevant, for that of the members of their family, from the point of view of EU law.*
After Rottmann (C-135/08), this is the second case ever addressing loss of nationality leading to loss of EU citizenship and the rights attached to it. The Court of Justice has stated that loss of nationality on grounds which aim at ensuring that there is a genuine link between the person concerned and his State of nationality is not precluded by EU law. However, the competent national authorities must be able to examine the consequences of such loss for the person concerned and his or her family members from the point of view of EU law, including the principle of proportionality. Moreover, national law must allow for such a person to recover nationality ex tunc where appropriate.

The CJEU found that this rule, that is capable of depriving Art. 4(3) Cit. Dir. of its full effect as Romanian citizens (in this case a Romanian citizen resident in France) could be dissuaded from using their right to move and reside as a citizen of the Union (Art. 21 TFEU) because they are effectively penalized for exercising this right. As no objective justification for this difference in treatment was given in the reference and the arguments presented by the Member State during the proceedings (proof of domicile and administrative burden) could not, according to the CJEU, justify the fact that mobile Romanian citizens effectively have one document, a passport, that they can use as travel document, whereas non-mobile Romanian citizens are also entitled to an identity document that they can use to exercise their right to move and reside, the CJEU found that Romania had breached its obligations under EU law, more specifically Art. 21 TFEU and Art. 45(1) EU Charter, read in combination with Art. 4(3) Directive 2004/38.*

* In W.Y. (C-85/21) the Court rejected as manifestly ill-founded an application concerning loss of EU citizenship. W.Y. acquired Austrian nationality in 1992 after having renounced his Turkish nationality. In 2018, an Austrian court confirmed that W.Y. had lost automatically Austrian nationality in 1994 upon reacquisition of Turkish nationality.
W.Y. argued that the Austrian authorities upon deciding on his loss of Austrian nationality failed to perform a proportionality assessment in line with CJEU jurisprudence (i.e. Tjebbes, C-221/17) and that the loss of EU citizenship had important consequences for his private and professional life. The CJEU rejected the application as manifestly ill-founded since W.Y.'s loss of Austrian nationality occurred before that country's accession to the EU in 1995. Since W.Y. never had EU citizenship (similar to the reasoning in Kaur (C-192/99), Articles 20 and 21 TFEU are not applicable to his situation.*

* A national of one Member State who is lawfully resident in another Member State is entitled to rely on the first paragraph of Article 12 EC against national legislation, such as the Law on the surrender of persons (Overleveringswet), of 29 April 2004, which lays down the conditions under which the competent judicial authority can refuse to execute a European arrest warrant issued with a view to the enforcement of a custodial sentence.
Article 4(6) of Council Framework Decision 2002/584/JHA of 13 June 2002 on the European arrest warrant and the surrender procedures between Member States must be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a citizen of the Union, the Member State of execution cannot, in addition to a condition as to the duration of residence in that State, make application of the ground for optional non-execution of a European arrest warrant laid down in that provision subject to supplementary administrative requirements, such as possession of a residence permit of indefinite duration.
Article 12 EC is to be interpreted as not precluding the legislation of a Member State of execution under which the competent judicial authority of that State is to refuse to execute a European arrest warrant issued against one of its nationals with a view to the enforcement of a custodial sentence, whilst such a refusal is, in the case of a national of another Member State having a right of residence on the basis of Article 18(1) EC, subject to the condition that that person has lawfully resided for a continuous period of five years in that Member State of execution.

* Art. 20 TFEU Subject: Loss of Rights
Ref. from High Court, Denmark, 16 Nov. 2021
* The case concerns the compatibility of the Danish rules on the loss of citizenship with EU law. Danish nationals, born abroad and who have never lived in Denmark, lose their nationality by operation of law upon reaching the age of 22 on ground of lack of a genuine link with Denmark if no application to retain Danish nationality has been made before that date. The CJEU is asked to decide whether the Danish rules are consistent with Art. 20 TFEU (EU citizenship) read in conjunction with Art. 7 of the EU Charter (right to private and family life). AG Szpunar advises the CJEU to rule that Danish legislation is not compatible with EU law as it fails to provide for an individual examination, based on the principle of proportionality, of the consequences of the loss of nationality and of EU citizenship in light of EU law. AG Szpunar considers that following Tjebbes a.o. (C-221/17) all situations involving loss of nationality also entailing the loss of EU citizenship have to be examined in light of the principle of proportionality. The second ground of incompatibility concerns the lack of the possibility to recover ex tunc Danish nationality when the person applies for a travel document or any other document providing evidence of their nationality. According to the AG, the possibility to regain Danish nationality via the general naturalization procedure does not meet the requirements set out in the Tjebbes a.o. case.
The Court, however, finds that this law is compatible with EU law, even if it entails the loss of EU citizenship, as long as there is a possibility to apply for retention or recovery of Danish nationality. In this procedure, the competent authorities have to assess the proportionality of the loss of nationality from an EU law perspective and ex tunc retention or recovery of nationality has to be possible. MSs have to allow a 'reasonable period of time' to make such an application. MSs have to inform the individual of the loss of nationality and the possibility to apply for retention or recovery of that nationality. The 'reasonable period of time' starts either when the age of 22 is reached but only after the individual has been informed of the options to retain or recover nationality. Failing that, MSs have to, as an ancillary issue, make an individual assessment when an application for a travel or any other document showing the nationality of the individual is made.

Ref. from Rechtbank Den Haag (zp Utrecht), Netherlands, 10 Sep. 2020 and Residence
* In this case the CJEU is asked to develop its rulings in the Ruiz Zambrano and Chavez-Vilchez cases. The case concerns a minor Dutch citizen who was born in Thailand, the State of which his mother is a national, and where it has lived ever since. Initially, the child was cared for by his maternal grandmother. After her divorce, his Thai mother returns to Thailand and assumes the role of his sole carer. At the time of the reference, there is no contact between the Dutch father and the child, and the mother has sole parental responsibility over him according to a Thai court ruling.
AG De La Tour concludes that Art. 20 TFEU is not precluding legislation of a MS under which it refuses to grant a secondary right of residence in the territory of that State to a third country national who is the parent of a minor child who is a national of that State where that child has never resided in the territory of the Union, has his habitual residence outside that territory and does not intend to exercise the rights attaching to his status as a citizen of the Union by applying to enter and reside in that State together with that parent, on whom he would be dependent.
Art. 20 TFEU also states that when that parent submits an application for the grant of a derived right of residence in the MS of which the child is a national and to which the child intends to go in order to reside, the competent authority of that MS must establish, in accordance with Art. 24 of the Charter, that the transfer of the child is in the child's best interests. In order to make that determination, it is necessary to consider, in the light of all the circumstances of the case, the extent to which that transfer is likely to affect the physical and mental well-being of the child, his material situation and his affective, family and social ties. That determination must also be based on evidence showing that the transfer of the child is real and that the child's stay in the MS concerned is not temporary or accidental and is not for the sole purpose of providing one of the parents with a derived right of residence under Art. 20 TFEU.
For the purposes of assessing whether there is a dependency relationship capable of giving rise to a derived right of residence under Article 20 TFEU, a decisive factor is the moment when the parent who is a third-country national has assumed the daily care of his child, a citizen of the Union. It is for the competent national authority to determine, on the basis of all the concrete circumstances of the case, the extent to which that parent has custody of the child or bears the legal, financial or affective burden for the child at the time when its application is decided, and to satisfy itself that that custody is exercised or that that burden is borne in the context of a real and stable family life.
On the other hand, the fact that the other parent, a citizen of the Union, and another relative who is a third-country national have in the past exercised custody of the child or borne the legal, financial or affectionate burden for the child, or are in a position to do so not be inferred that there is not such a relationship of dependency between the parent who is a third-country national and that child that the child would be prevented from exercising his right to travel and reside in the territory of the Member State of which he is a national if the parent who is a third-country national had been refused a right of residence in the Member State concerned.

2. Art. 20 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning, first, that a relationship of dependency capable of justifying the grant of a derived right of residence under that article does not exist on the sole ground that a national of a MS who is an adult and has never exercised his or her right of freedom of movement, and his or her spouse, who is an adult and a third-country national, are required to live together under the obligations arising from marriage according to the law of the MS of which the Union citizen is a national and in which the marriage was entered into and, second, that, where the Union citizen is a minor, the assessment of the existence of a relationship of dependency capable of justifying the grant of a derived right of residence under that article to that child's parent, who is a third-country national, must be based on the taking into account, in the child's best interests, of all of the circumstances of the case. Where that parent lives on a stable basis with the other parent, who is a Union citizen, of that minor, there is a rebuttable presumption of such a relationship of dependency.
3. In 2017, the mother agreed for the child's father to take him to Romania where they both reside, which resulted in her criminal prosecution for international kidnapping. The CJEU ruled that the provisions of German criminal law that stipulate tougher penalties for international kidnapping as opposed to national kidnapping contravene Art. 21 TFEU. According to the Court the German rules amount to a difference in treatment that affects or limits the exercise of the right to freedom of movement since EU citizens are more likely than German nationals to be prosecuted for international kidnapping, especially upon return to their State of origin. The Court ruled that this difference in treatment was not justified as it is not proportional, i.e goes beyond what is necessary to protect the legitimate interest protected by the rules. More specifically, the Court found that the reasons put forward by the German authorities as to the difficulties of enforcing judicial decisions concerning abducted children in other States contradicted Council Reg. 2201/2003 that establishes the principle of the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and matters of parental responsibility.*

* AG De la Tour advices the CJEU to find that the Czech Republic has failed to satisfy its obligations under Art. 22 TFEU. Mobile EU citizens resident in that Member State cannot become a member of a political party or movement which effectively means that they cannot stand as a candidate for both the EP elections and the elections for municipalities; a right they enjoy by virtue of stats as EU citizen. Although Member States are currently still competent to regulate membership of a political party, they have to observe EU law when doing this. This means that Member States have to observe the principle of equality that stems from the words 'under the same conditions as nationals of that State' in Art. 22 TFEU. In the analysis of this provision, the AG considers Dir. 93/109 and 94/80, which provide detailed arrangements regarding the right to vote and stand as a candidate for both the EP and municipal elections which apply to mobile EU citizens in their host-Member States, and the rights of EU citizens both in the TFEU and the EU Charter. The AG also considers the Czech rules in light of the rights to freedom of association and expression (Arts. 11 and 12(1) EU Charter and Art. 11 ECHR).
The AG concludes that rules that restrict mobile EU citizens exercising their voting rights which are not provided for in the aforementioned directives constitute discrimination within the scope of the Treaties. The AG discards the Czech claim that the differential treatment of mobile EU citizens can be justified under Art. 4(2) TEU – national identity – arguing that national identity is respected in this context mobile EU citizens can only participate in the elections for the European Parliament and for the municipalities in their host-Member State, not national elections and that there is no aim of harmonizing national electoral systems. As to becoming a member of a political party, the AG finds that it is the political parties and not the Member States that determine their organization and the rules for selecting candidates. More generally, the AG finds that national identity within the meaning of Art. 4(2) TEU cannot exempt Member States from respecting fundamental rights, including the principle of democracy and equality.

The applicant is a dual Romanian and British national who was registered female at birth. While living in the UK, the applicant had his name and title changed from female to male and was issued with a new driving licence, passport, and a gender recognition certificate in accordance with UK laws. The applicant requested the Romanian authorities to amend his birth certificate concerning his first name, sex and personal numeric code to reflect his male gender and to issue him with a new birth certificate. This request was denied by the administration since it requires a final judicial decision by a Romanian court. The applicant complains that this condition amounts to an obstacle to the exercise of his EU rights under Articles 20, 21 and 18 TFEU in conjunction with Articles 1, 20, 21 and 7 EU Charter. His argument is that the Romanian procedures have been found by the ECtHR as lacking clarity and foresee ability making a different decision from that of the UK authorities possible.*
AG De La Tour advises the Court to rule irrelevant the fact that the request for the birth certificate was made when EU law was no longer applicable in the UK. On the substance of the claim, the AG advises the Court to rule that EU law precludes the authorities of a Member State to refuse to recognise and register in the birth certificate of one of its own nationals the first name and gender identity that were lawfully declared and acquired in another Member State. Judicial or administrative procedures for change of sex or gender cannot constitute obstacles to what should be an automatic recognition. The AG proposes to limit the automatic recognition of such identity details to the birth certificate without necessarily extending it to other civil status issues such as marriage and parentage. The legal argument used is that the automatic recognition stems from Article 21 TFEU and is needed for the exercise of the right to free movement since the identity details in the birth certificate are necessary for the issuance of an ID card or passport.

Ref. from Verwaltungsgerichtshof, Liechtenstein, 16 Feb. 2011
* Art. 16(1) 2004/38 is to be interpreted such that an EEA national with a right of permanent residence, who is a pensioner and in receipt of social welfare benefits in the host EEA State, may claim the right to family reunification even if the family member will also be claiming social welfare benefits.

☞ EFTA 26 July 2016, E-28/15 Jabbi v Imm. Appeals Board (NO)
* Art. 7(1)(b)+7(2) Cit. Dir. Subject: Residence
Ref. from Oslo Tingrett, Norway, 8 Nov. 2015
* Where an EEA national, pursuant to Article 7(1)(b) and Article 7(2) of Directive 2004/38/EC, has created or strengthened a family life with a third country national during genuine residence in an EEA State other than that of which he is a national, the provisions of that directive will apply by analogy where that EEA national returns with the family member to his home State.

☞ EFTA 9 Feb. 2021, E-1/20 Kerim v Government (NO)
* Art. 35 Cit. Dir. Subject: Loss of Rights
Ref. from Norges Høyesterett, Norway, 3 Mar. 2020
* In order to determine whether a marriage of convenience for the purposes of Art. 35 Dir. 2004/38 exists, in circumstances in which reasonable doubts exist as to whether the marriage in question is in fact genuine, it is necessary for the national authorities to establish, on the basis of a case-by-case examination, that at least one spouse in the marriage has essentially entered into it for the purpose of improperly obtaining the right of free movement and residence by a third-country national spouse rather than for the establishment of a genuine marriage.
For the determination of whether a marriage of convenience for the purposes of Art. 35 Dir. 2004/38 exists, in circumstances in which reasonable doubts exist as to whether the marriage in question is in fact genuine, facts must be established and assessed in their entirety, which includes taking into account the subjective intention of an EEA national for entering into a marriage with a third-country national.
